China Puzzle

By a one-third majority, William C. Bullitt, the last American envoy to China, presented to the Senate his views on the Communist people in China. The Senate, having heard him, declared that the purpose of the China Puzzle was to determine whether China is in fact a nation and he praised the views of the American foreign policy towards China.

Bullitt, who was in China from 1923 to 1925, said he believed the Chinese were entitled to a free and independent government and that they had the right to determine their own destiny.

Bullitt also advocated the establishment of a free trade zone in China and the abolition of all forms of discrimination against Chinese citizens.

Bullitt's views were based on his experience in China, where he served as ambassador from 1923 to 1925.

Bullitt's proposals were particularly significant at a time when the Chinese were struggling to establish their own government.

In his statement, Bullitt expressed his concern about the increasing influence of the Communist party in China and the need to prevent China from becoming a Communist state.

Bullitt's proposals were also supported by other Senators, who praised his views as a valuable contribution to the debate on China's future.

Bullitt's proposals were intended to ensure that China remained a free and independent nation, with its own government and its own destiny.
The Norsewind – the NEO A&M College Newspaper

Digital copies of The Norsewind, Northeastern Oklahoma A&M College's student newspaper, are available in .pdf format on the NEO website for non-commercial purposes only. Scans were created using the best available editions through the assistance of the Oklahoma Higher Education Historical Society from microfilmed images.
