The Northeastern A&M homecoming activities are in full swing on the campus. Many clubs and organizations have announced their designated places to enter floats in the homecoming parade, and the Norsemen will be among the floats sponsored by the university.

Freshmen Turn Tables

Northeastern A&M Holds Hell Week

Northeastern A&M students and freshmen have turned the tables on this week's activities. Football players and freshmen have been known to pull pranks on each other. This week, freshmen were required to wear their registration card on their clothing and were required to roll their pants up to show their bare legs. The freshmen were required to wear shorts.
A Kind of Spirit

The Golden Norse football squad appeared to be fired up last Friday night, and it's no wonder. What with our very own instructors pulling pranks and acting like college students, it was about the only thing that kept the boys off their backs and off their feet. The only thing that kept the students of a college to look forward to and the only thing that kept the students of a college to look forward to was the game. We were under the impression that there are several advantages to having a good game. One is that the fans are well-behaved and the other is that the players are well-behaved. The secret of happiness is for everyone to enjoy.

If we have your spirit, it is in each individual's health. If we have great spirits, it is within each one of us. Which kind do you want?...How bad?

The Faculty's Help

Probably one of the biggest reasons for dropping out of college is the lack of individual attention to the problems of students. It is with the utmost sincerity that we compliment the faculty of Northeastern A&M college for the personal help they give to their students.

In many of the nation's schools, a student who has a really good problem in his classes and his personal life is just out of luck. Although there are no full-time psychologists employed at Northeastern, sincere counseling of high quality may be found by any of several instructors. There is no reason for anyone to drop out of college at the first attempt.

One lack of the counseling which has been brought up more often than others is the lack of detailed guidance in the planning of curriculum. Several students put too much responsibility on the shoulders of this advice and neglect their own responsibilities in choosing the right schedule.

Now - And Nov. 4

November 4 graduates of Northeastern A&M college will be jogging into Mass. They write that day will be their impression of our school.

With the great emphasis on homecoming, it would seem that Nov. 4 may be the most important day of the year. But the entire day (and for that matter) will not be made Nov. 4, but in the weeks preceding.

There must be some encouragement to make students work on the various lines that are being prepared for the homecoming parade and let this point not be stressed enough. This is not an excuse for anyone to drop out of school at the first attempt.

The work of the faculty in this respect is obvious, and the students should be held responsible for their own work and take the initiative in helping the faculty with the work that is being done.

Donna McNatt:

By Odin's Daughter

Did you ever see a football player in a blue cedar cup, using a high, squeaky voice, and using his hands to play cards? He is truly a blue cedar cup. Or people in luggage racks saving saws? Does someone costs of sugar and polish between here and Chil-

Although these are familiar to you, ask someone who went to Grand Rapids to explain.

It was a fairly easy trip except for one "soothingly." The trip will last long in the memories of about 180 college students, and they need, and will, at N.E.D. could that many people take advantage of such a wonderful experience.

HOMECOMING QUEENS

Most of the homecoming queen candidates have been selected. When you consider that there are 15 girls representing, it seems to be a good sum of money. Let's hope that one of them may be in the future, and that one of these girls may be the one who will represent the college at the COMPLETES year, instead of marrying and leaving one week after homecoming, as was done in the past. Here for all the hardness, they are a member of a select group of beautiful girls who have given their college a lift for many years. "ALL MY HEROES"

For three weeks, amid partially painted paper trees and a half-built brick wall, the reheasal for Arthur Miller's "All My Sons" took place. The reheasal took on the stage went well with the uncompleted work of the performers. But, today, the brilliantly costumed set will merely be a background for the story that will be performed there. It is a tightly planned play, with each scene developing into a story and you will never forget.

A BIT OF BLOOD

Thirty-six people play, musical index: Their with thermometers in their mouths, and a nurse juggling balls in people's fingers was what commanded me as I entered the blood bank Thursday afternoon. At one end of the room was mysteriously covered with sheets and at the other was a single table, where white-pawed people were eating. Next in it were two pale-blood beds where white-pawed people were…...OUT! My first impulse was to give my blood, but I was in line, buoyed in a chair and told I was volunteering.

The worst part was walking in line watching the Gray Ladies helping these people unite, the white-pawed people over the snack table. There was a little trick when they wouldn't find my vein, but a little jiggling took care of that. But to emphasize, I was a nurse and I was prepared a pin showing my undated bravery and complete confidence in the Red Cross.
Norsemen Trounce Murray Footballers

The Golden Norsemen of Northern A&M started last week with a 17-0 victory over the Murray Aggies of Tallahoma, 24-0. The Norsemen, new to the field and hungry for a victory, but the prevailing threats of the fighting Norsemen soon punctured the hopes of the visitors. The Norsemen received the opening kickoff and started a drive which was cleared by fullback Charles Brown playing from the outside line for the Aggies. McCollum kicked the extra point and the Norsemen led 7-0. The Aggies barely had time to recover from the Norsemen's first touchdown before they found themselves one yard from touchdown.

McCLUNG TO SINGHORN

Sinninghorn was not through scoring touchdowns, however, as only a few moments later he was hauled in a McCollum pass and tucked the ball in the fifth touchdown of the half. McCollum again kicked the extra point and the Norsemen led 16-0 at halftime.

George Canaan opened the second half scoring with a punt from the lined deep, giving the Norsemen a 4-0 lead. At this point of the game, Coach Red Robinson began clearing his bench in order to hold on the score. However, the Norse spirit seemed to reserve the reserves as it had in the regulars, and the Norse continued to mount.

The Aggies finally broke into the scoring column by punting the Norse over their own goal line for a safety.

The fourth quarter saw much more action. Phil Edmonson, Aggie backfield, scored the visitor's first touchdown of the game, but the kick for extra points was missed, tying the score at 4-44.

SPECTACULAR PLAY

One of the most spectacular plays of the game resulted in the last Norse touchdown. Gene Baker, Norseman end, had the ball hiked to the ground by a group of Aggies. He was picked up by Roy Felker who started through half the Aggie line and down to the Aggie touchdown.

The Red Norse touchdowns came when Steve Prichett found a hole and changed 15 yards. McCollum's successful kick ended the scoring, with the score 24-0.

Students Give 175 Pints

Of Blood to Red Cross

The Red Cross Bloodmobile visited the Northwestern A&M campus last week. Blood donations began at noon Tuesday, and lasted until noon Friday. Prior to the visit, students at Northwestern A&M had charged the city of Miami to a constant in blood donations. The campaign also held a contest as a part of "Red Week."

During the Bloodmobile visit, 328 pints of blood were donated. The college students gave 155, compared to 114 donated by the citizens of Miami. An additional 12 pints were donated by faculty members at Northwestern A&M. In the contest between the sophomore and freshman classes, the freshmen emerged as the winner, donating 68 pints compared to 58 for the sophomores.

Helping with the Bloodmobile were several Red Cross counselors from Tulsa. Charles Austin, head of the Tulsa Red Cross, announced that he was quite pleased with the amount donated.

The Northeastern A&M Golden Norse, after overpowering the strong University of Wichita Freshmen squad here Friday night by a 36-7 score.
