Art Show Features Student Class Work

Several Northeastern A&M art students had a unique display at the Winter Student Art Show, on display in the Fine Arts Colonnade. In past years the NRO art department sponsored only one student art show, but this year will hold two, the Winter show currently on display, as well as the Spring show.

The exhibition will be open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, and during performances of the drama productions of "Patience" and "The Road."

SELECTION COMMITTEE

A committee of faculty and student art majors selected the student work to be displayed from the 150 pieces done in class during the current semester. The committee included Kathryn Peake, chairman, Dr. Nicholas Callahan, and Denis Graham. Members of the selection committee were David Pillars, Cleveland; Jeff Evans, Grove; and Bette Hillis, Biggs.

Oil Paintings

Students from the junior Oil Painting I class showing paintings are: Anne Taylor, Miami; Carolee Leonard, Quapaw; Judy Peake, Miami; Linda Reynolds, Miami; and Linda Brown, Miami.

"Probably the idea that画画 are the most original work, but this is the first time that students have been given the opportunity to exhibit their work," said Ms. Peake.

Two Candidates Seek Presidency

By STEVE KINER

Following the final day of voting, the upcoming race for the Student Senate presidency at Northeastern A&M will have two candidates under the current administration. The two candidates are Marcia Hill, a sophomore from Bartlesville, and Pam Grunwald, a sophomore from Miami.

Marcia Hill, a sophomore from Bartlesville, served two terms as freshman class senator-vice president, and the fall semester of this year as president. "I think the students need to be more academically focused. Students should become more active in developing courses that will serve the interests of students," said Ms. Grunwald.

Other plans in Mr. Grunwald’s platform include increasing representation in the senate, and voting reforms. "I think the current student senate needs to be more administratively focused. Students should become more active in developing courses that will serve the interests of students," said Ms. Grunwald.

David Brown, a sophomore from Tulsa, will run unopposed for the office of student representative, and serving as parliamentarian.

Students were awarded speeches and honorary titles at the Oklahoma State University, Norman, Association Tournament at Central University, Edmond.

"The books by students first semester will be bought back by the Northeastern A&M bookstore, located in the Carter Student Union, Dec. 16 from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. There will be a list posted on the counter window outside of the bookstore. A textbook which will be bought back, explained Carnegie Green, bookstore manager.

"The textbooks might buy up to 50% of the new books and new books will be 20% of the price for the new books."
Students Not Seen As Adults

One of the main complaints students voice about Northeastern A&M is that they are not treated as adults, on campus or off. While we do disagree that college-age students should be treated as adults, we can also see how the administration and students got the impression that NDA students are not very mature.

For instance, recently most of all things, have been organized. Attended are the various women's resilience bills. We really think this is ridiculous.

After all, the climate of a girl's nature actually succeeding are pretty slim, as has been proven in all of the cases reported this year. Also, more is apparent that the object of these "tales" is to obtain certain articles of female apparel, and alleged "residents" are made, it would appear that we have a rather strange trend.

Conserving the image as some of the girls, we include broken windows, cracked door jambs, and so on, and the fact that nobody guarding any school property could be convicted and sent to the state prison, perhaps it would be better if the next time these fellows get up the urge, they would just go downtown and buy the Inquirer's.

Anyhow, the "party monster" up we come out of the student body's party is long gone, and these right-wing, often being the girls' dorms are an invasion of the female resident student's right to privacy.

Furthermore, with the campus crime rate up the security patrol has had to increase in order to prevent trouble-making inside.

If we students want to be treated as adults, let us act like adults. Start forming a group to stop these childish acts of vandalism, because any time a small group of students does something stupid, it makes the whole student body look bad.

Exams Lurking In Near Future

Final exams are lurking in the near future—to some they're too close for comfort.

No matter how hard one tries though, the fact that finals are just around the corner cannot be allowed. Every college student goes through the process of "burning the midnight oil" in order to prepare citizens for the last test of the year—The Final.

"The midnight oil" is rapidly becoming the sole means of cramming for exams. Dorm lights stay on until the wee hours of the morning. Students stumble through pages and pages of notes trying to stuff everything they supposedly learned in the past 14 weeks away for the exam, which is only a few hours away. The end result for most "midnight oil burners" is a thinking time to choose college as an alternative, coupled with the fact that while public given to the stores of "- tired students" of the height of the recession, with some institutions that the interest of the U.S. youth in a college education had increased, warranted education two years ago to forecast enrollment declines that threatened to worsen the financial squeeze on many institutions of higher learning.

Pestilence Off Base

Fortunately, these pestilences were soon off base. Now, while such worries seem unwarranted, campus administrators concede that raising enrollment will not, by itself, solve the student's financial troubles.

In fact, "U.S. News and World Report," (the source of information for this article), has researchers that reveal that many colleges are continually lowering the number of enrollment, both to maintain high academic standards and to avoid extra expenses.

Despite this fact, prospective college students are not giving up—they are meeting the problem head on. The cost of college is high, but the students are not without help.

Government Assistance

Federal Government assistance—totalling about $7 billion a year—is available in the form of grants, subsidized loans, and subsidized jobs. While aid does come from either half billion, and a further half billion is provided by the government.

Also, a growing number of young people are alternating between school and college students in "co-op" programs, which help pay their way through school. In short, there is no feasible way a student cannot make college expenses.

All in all, the situation on campus this fall indicates a continuing desire on the part of young people to get education—where the possibilities of finding ways to get there.
