Providing Aid Center's Duty

By Karen McDade

Helping students is what the Counseling Center is all about.

Any person who is enrolled at NDU may use the center. According to Ken Wilson, coordinator of the center, it is there to help students benefit from their college experience.

Wilson pointed out that in a recent study for students to explore and discuss any problems they may have.

"Our counseling functions are basically three-fold. They are personal, social, educational, and vocational," explained Wilson.

"Seventy to seventy-five percent of the students either don't know what field they want to go into, or they change what they have started. This is why counseling is so important," Wilson emphasized.

The graduate who may need an extra semester or an extra year of school raises costs on $5,000 to $10,000 in potential earnings. Trained personnel are available to help students.

Counselors are John Lynn Thompson, Bruce Deacon, Leon Pan, Rose Wilkins, and Ken Wilson.

THOMPSON is in charge of industrial counseling students. He works with mental health issues related to counseling.

Love and Comedy Rule...

"Dream" Becomes Reality

By Brenda Hancock

"A Midsummer Night's Dream" is scheduled for tomorrow Oct. 7, 8, and 9 in the Fine Arts Auditorium, according to production director, Don Nichols.

This play is a farce and is one of Shakespeare's earliest plays. The play is centered around the preparation for the wedding. It is a theme of young love and marriage.

The wedding of Hermia and Demetrius is actually four stories in one.

The story centers around the costume department. The legendary Greek god who is getting married, is the son of the King of Athens. He has four stories: Hermia, Hippolyta, Demetrius, and Lysander.

Everyone is to prepare for the wedding. The play is filled with common working men. They've never seen a play in their life and now they are instructed to perform.

These men include Bottom, portrayed by Claude Turner; Flute, portrayed by Ron Davis; Snout, portrayed by Larry Morgan.

In the second story we find Hermia, portrayed by Lisa Bennett, in love with Lysander, portrayed by Tom Hinton. But Demetrius, portrayed by Doug Birmingham, loves Hermia. Hermia's father, Egeus, provokes Demetrius, for he and Lysander slope into the Rhine. Hermia is portrayed by Lisa Lee, Hermia's best friend, in love with Lysander. When Hermia marries Demetrius she follows the young lovers. Hermia also follows Demetrius.

In the last story the King and Queen of fairies, Oberon and Titania, and the love triangle, Lysander and Hermia, are fighting. To revenge himself on her, Oberon sends Puck (Ken Collins) to get a magic flower, which has magic juice. When the magic juice is put into someone's eye, the first person they see, they fall in love with. Puck tries to help Hermia by putting juice in Lysander and Demetrius. As a result, Hermia now has two boys chasing her.

This is the story the audience will be pleased with. The audience will laugh and cry as the story unfolds.

"A Midsummer Night's Dream" is a farcical, romantic comedy by William Shakespeare. It is one of his first plays and is a classic of the theatre.

The play is performed by students and faculty. If there is any space available on the team, any other who would like to go, are welcome to come.

The cost is $3.00 to $5.00 to see people with other performances and $2.50 to $3.00 with other performances.

This will include transportation, meals, and lodging.

"Light Show" on Country Road

By Stanley Porier

Julio 9, 1937, a light house stood in the town of Aon, Litchfield, Idaho, illuminated the road. A group of school children returned from the light house and shared their experiences with the newspaper. The light was on a hillside, three miles from the town, and was the first of its kind in the area. The children were excited to see the light and returned home with a Flour and Bread充足的储备.

Driving through the town, one can see the light shining brightly over the town. The town’s name, Aon, is a play on words, as it is a shortened form of "Aonand", a Native American word for light. The light house serves as a navigation aid for local fishermen and boaters.

Garland Middletown, owner of the Flour and Bread, recounted the story of how the light was first installed. In 1905, a group of townsfolk gathered to discuss the need for a light house. They agreed that the town was too far from the nearest light house and that a light house was necessary for the safety of the town’s residents.

The light was eventually installed, and the town was named Aon. The light house has been in operation ever since, providing a beacon of light for the town’s residents. The town is now known as "Aonand" in honor of the light house and the beacon of hope it provides to the town’s residents.

Star Wars "Remake" of Oz

Dana Walker
Editorial Editor

The emptiness of the black screen is broken by the plashy sound of drums, a long time ago, in a galaxy far, far away... We are carried with the first scenes of John Williams score to an enchanted universe over the rainbow.

In many respects, "Star Wars" parallels that classic movie of the 1950's, "The Wizard of Oz." LUCRE SKYWALKER THE valiant hero of the movie could be compared to the character of Dorothy in "Wizard." He lives on a desert world known as Tatooine. There Luke longer for adventure and an end to the dull life he leads. Much as Dorothy longs to be rid of Kansas.

Han Solo, the dashing pilot of the Millennium Falcon joins forces with young Luke, much like the tin man goes about his business in a cool profession. Not until their adventures are almost over, does he find heart and a sense of compassion for others.

Solo's faithful companion is eight-foot tall Wookie named Chewbacca. He is not unlike the cowardly lion. He runs from the smallest threat to his own safety. As the plot progresses Chewbacca learns to sense of duty and faces his fears...ending courage.

There are also characters C-3PO (an android), who represents the cultural and loveable scoundrels, who play the role of Toto; R2-D2 (robot), the Jewels (midgets), which remind one of the brash midgets/ vilainous people who look like the evil trees in the forest; Obi Wan Kenobi, the wizard himself with magic and a big saber; Princess Leia, as Glenda the good witch of the north; and Darth Vader, as the wicked witch of the west. Even after he is gone, his presence is still felt.

On the foamy waters of the 1977 Orange Bowl, the Notre Dame Fighting Irish faced off against the Nebraska Cornhuskers. Tom Osborne, the coach of the Cornhuskers, had been searching for a defensive complement to his already formidable team. He had found the perfect complement in a freshman from Oklahoma High School, Marty Shepherd.

Marty Shepherd had always been a star athlete in high school. As a member of the 1977 Oklahoma High School All-Star Team, he had attracted the attention of college recruiters. Nebraska was one of the teams that had expressed interest in Shepherd. Osborne knew that Shepherd's defensive skills could be an asset to the Cornhuskers, and he wanted to add him to the team for the upcoming season.

Shepherd had been a three-sport star in high school, excelling in football, basketball, and baseball. However, he had never been a quarterback in high school. Osborne knew that Shepherd's athletic ability could make him a valuable asset to the team, even if his lack of experience at the position could be a concern.

Shepherd was a quick study. Within weeks of joining the team, he had become a key player in the Cornhuskers' defense. His ability to read plays and make quick decisions made him a valuable asset to the team. Osborne was pleased with Shepherd's performance.

Shepherd's success on the field was a testament to his hard work and dedication. He had always been a top student in high school, and he knew that he needed to excel in his studies to succeed in college. Osborne was impressed with Shepherd's determination and work ethic.

Shepherd's impact on the team was immediate. In his first game, he helped the Cornhuskers to a decisive victory over their opponents. Osborne was pleased to see the team's defense improve with Shepherd on the field.

Shepherd's success on the field was not without its challenges. He faced criticism from some fans and media outlets who questioned his ability to play quarterback. However, Osborne remained confident in his decision to add Shepherd to the team.

Shepherd's performance in his first season at Nebraska was impressive. He helped the Cornhuskers to several impressive victories, including a key win over the Ohio State Buckeyes. Osborne was pleased with Shepherd's performance and knew that he had made the right decision in adding the freshman to the team.

As the season progressed, Shepherd continued to excel. He became a leader on the field, inspiring his teammates with his work ethic and dedication. Osborne knew that Shepherd was a valuable asset to the team and had no doubt that he would continue to improve in the years to come.

Shepherd's impact on the team was not limited to the field. He was a positive influence on his teammates, helping to create a strong bond within the team. Osborne was pleased to see the team's chemistry improve as Shepherd became more involved with his teammates.

In conclusion, Marty Shepherd's addition to the Nebraska Cornhuskers was a key component to the team's success in the 1977 season. Osborne knew that Shepherd's talent and dedication would continue to be a valuable asset to the team in the years to come.

Hamper Reading

Results to the reading comprehension tests are compiled and, although the figures are impressive, there are two reasons than mean the eye.

We feel it is a disturbing situation, letting ourselves sink into a false sense of security when scanning test scores. The comprehension scores are markedly higher than in former years, but data shows that students with higher aptitudes are enrolled in developmental reading classes. Naturally, the scores reflect this factor. Do we say, "Well, how nice, NEO students are reading better", or "Let's take a closer look at this and find out what's going on?" We suggest the latter.

Instead of sitting back and saying, "What a shame", why don't we embark on a long-range plan to make our college more highly literate? Offer more reading classes for students, and especially geared classes for foreign students. If those are made mandatory for those with low ACT scores, we would lay the groundwork for a more well-rounded student body. We will also see that higher test scores and better class grade point averages would result. We must begin with the premise that reading is the best and most basic cornerstone in the educational process.

National trends do not naturally have to be a reflection of the NEO campus. We don't feel that NEO should be satisfied with the level of education that it has to offer. As students, we have a right to all the knowledge and help we can get their hands on. We ask that the administration lend a helping hand. Don't handicap some of those who can read or write well enough. The job market is rough enough as it is...to be forewarned is to be forearmed. The amunition for the battle is good reading and comprehension skills.

WHAT'S THIS? TEST SHOW
I HAVE A 9TH GRADE
READING LE.. LEV. L.E.V.E.L.

At 12 o'clock high noon, the TV got going, and it's another day of football. Can you imagine how many of those things you'll do in your college career? And how much time do you have to do them? I guess you have to be up late, but the TV didn't do anything for me. I returned at 1:45 to find more of the same stuff. (the one who likes the Flapper) in the kitchen. David and Susan were arguing over why he shouldn't spin on m'own ter and the Pittsburgh Steelers were killing the Cleveland Browns. Just to further Elaine's David's loneliness, our neighbor stopped coming over for coffee, because she was married in the livingroom. After the fifth bruise she decided she was not very much to bear. She now limits her visits to times when David is not at home. Susan, on the other hand, practices yoga calling in her spare time. Her range is getting better, last week she wrote a first glass. At 2 o'clock Susan came in and we went to Miami in the car, she could quote "slide on the big slide". It's another day of football, and you can see something about spending money that helps to build a solid future. At 5 o'clock a friend brought a novel entitled to it. Do you want to read what is going on in your car, I really have no idea, and let me later. There is something about spending money that helps to build a solid future.
