Candidates Express Opinions

By ALVIN MOELENSHMEIER, Managing Editor

Following the record-breaking filing for student senate offices, the two open positions will be contested for each office—president and vice-president.

Rusty Yates, a freshman journalism major from Jay, will be upended for the president’s position. Anthony Lauinger, a freshman business management major from Vinsetta, will also be upended for the office of vice-president.

Yates, serving his freshman year as a senate representative for the NORTHERN ROME community, feels the senate is large, related in his main concern as president will be mandatory issues. “The president is the voice of the students and the students will be the voice of the senate. What I want to see next year is more Senate members looking to the senate more for leadership,” commented Lauinger.

Yates, a junior and current vice-president for the president’s position, feels because a lot more things are done when the president has full support. "The president has a lot of students working for him and the president is able to be there for the students." The president is more active in the senate than last year because of the new position added and the new office of vice-president.

Alabaster Professor Supports Free Speech

The following article was taken directly from the April 16, 1977, issue of the student newspaper. The article was by Dr. Frank Danner, a member of the Department of English at the University of Alabama and a frequent contributor to the student newspaper.

"It should be made legal," is the endless refrain we hear. "True of false?"

Now there is an example of a true question that should never dare give in to the illusion of the complexity of another era. It's something to be changed and expect the same answer. But the answer that might be most obvious is the question. The answer that is back to some very dangerous possibilities.

First is the common-sense question that must follow: "Who shall decide what is and what is not?"

But the danger will be beyond that one question, and none will ever have the freedom. Nice freedom of the press is not freedom. If we want freedom of the press, we must have freedom of the people to access to information. The First Amendment to the Constitution is often weakened, or raped in fact, in a way that is not so obvious. It is not some collective "call the press" or some group of people called "journalists" who are guaranteed freedom for all citizens who are guaranteed freedom of religion, speech, press, and assembly. The Constitution expressed protection of individual liberties is itself a protection of communication with others. And it all ends in one question, with few personal liberties granted apparently equal employment.

How is the "free speech" question. It would be equally logical, from a Constitutional point of view, to designate speech as free speech and not as political.

The point appears seemingly written in the First Amendment that all who are free to any personal rights. But I don't like your form of worship. I am free to worship in the church of your choice. I don't like your form of worship. I am free to worship in the church of my choice. I don't like your form of worship. I am free to worship in the church of my choice. I don't like your form of worship. I am free to worship in the church of my choice.

Crucible' Drama Production Reviewed

By JEANNIE CARNELL

News Editor

All too often the students and faculty of the University of Alabama take the time and energy of our organizations for granted. It is important for them to realize that the time and effort they put into their organizations is not taken for granted.

The Crucible is a powerful and thought-provoking play that is sure to resonate with students and faculty alike. It is a must-see production for anyone who appreciates good drama.

The Crucible follows the story of three groups of people: Mary Warren, Abigail Williams, and John Proctor. Each character is well-developed and the dialogue is engaging.

Mary Warren, a young woman, is accused of witchcraft and is forced to choose between confessing and remaining silent. She is faced with the difficult decision of whether to tell the truth or protect her family. Abigail Williams, on the other hand, is a villager who is willing to go to any length to prove her own guilt. John Proctor, a farmer, is accused of witchcraft and is forced to face the consequences of his actions.

The play is a powerful reminder of the importance of truth and justice. It is a story about the dangers of ignorance and the importance of standing up for what is right.

College Paper Not PR Tool

BILL FOSTER

If all printers were determined not to print any college paper that reported on the issues that were most important to them, it would offend nobody, there would be very little paper printed.

Benjamin Franklin

When the last issue of the Nourse Wind was published, a staff member of the newspaper was suspended for "conduct unbecoming an employee." The issue contained an article that criticized the administration of the college. The article was written by a student who was suspended for writing the article.

The Nourse Wind's purpose is to provide a forum for the free exchange of ideas. It is the responsibility of the newspaper to hold itself accountable for the accuracy of its reporting. The newspaper must also ensure that its reporting is fair and balanced.

If a college paper is not a tool for the promotion of the college, then it should not be subject to censorship. College papers should be allowed to publish controversial issues in order to fulfill their role as a forum for the free exchange of ideas.
College Farm... Provides Experience

BY GRANT VICTOR

Students enrolled in agriculture at Northeastern A&M have the privilege of learning through experience at the college farm located approximately a mile east of the campus. Since there is a limit to the amount of instruction that can be given in the classroom, the laboratory work or actual work experience with animals at the farm is vital to a complete training program in agriculture.

The farm not only helps the students to get a hands-on experience in farming but it also helps them to get a better understanding of the animals they will encounter in their future careers.

Student Drowns

Mark D. Osborne, 17-year-old student at Northeastern A&M, was drowned on Friday afternoon while swimming in a pond on the farm. Osborne was one of the few students who had survived life-threatening situations until now. He was an excellent swimmer and had been teaching other students how to swim.

The incident occurred as Osborne was swimming with a group of friends in a pond located near the barns. One of his friends, who had also drowned, was able to warn Osborne to stay away from the pond, but he ignored the advice and continued swimming.

The cause of death was drowning. An autopsy revealed that Osborne had drowned after swimming for approximately 30 minutes. The coroner ruled the death a tragic accident.

Mark D. Osborne was one of the most promising students at Northeastern A&M. He was a member of the crop and livestock teams and had won several awards for his work in these areas. Osborne was well-liked by his classmates and was known for his hard work and dedication.

Students and faculty members are mourning the loss of Mark D. Osborne, who was a bright and promising student. The college has offered condolences to Osborne's family and friends.

Agriculture Future Golden

Many young women are entering the field of agriculture, and the future looks promising for the industry. Agriculture has been a staple of the American economy for centuries, and it continues to be a major contributor to the nation's economy.

Agriculture not only provides food and fiber but also offers opportunities for research and development. The industry is constantly evolving, and new technologies and practices are being developed to improve crop production and animal husbandry.

Agriculture also plays a vital role in the environment. Farmers and ranchers are working to reduce their impact on the environment, and efforts are being made to improve water quality and protect natural resources.

The future of agriculture is bright, and it is important for students and professionals to continue to work towards making the industry a more sustainable and environmentally friendly one.
