Reminiscing...

As the year comes to a close, the St. Louis, Nevada home, and Gail Lashley, Keota school, will be remembered. Yearbooks can be picked up in the business office.

The Carriage Bury, the Nebraska A&M community, will be remembered. Yearbooks can be picked up in the business office.

LRC Requests

Overdue Books

All library books are due by Friday, May 4. Those who do not return the books will be charged five dollars per book. These books include pages, and student identification numbers. These book numbers include the last name, and the first name of the student.

This year the library is treating a large number of books that are overdue.

"This is generally a problem," exclaimed Mrs. Brown, director.

"We have had more students come to the commencement exercises in the past few years," commented Mrs. Brown. "We have even had to get extra caps and gowns," Mrs. Brown added.

"We will award extra books to students in each division," stated Mrs. Brown. The Carriage Bury award will go to the outstanding graduating sophomore athlete. The Joe Allen award will go to the outstanding student in the school. The Outstanding Student award will go to the outstanding student in the school.

"We are looking forward to these exercises," concluded Mrs. Brown.
Food Service Provides Balanced Meals

By G.W. Harnick

Four o'clock in the morning, the kitchen shines, white and cool. And although it is early for many, it is the start of the normal day for some who work with food service in the NBO.

The first shift arrives at 5 a.m. and closes until 10. The second shift will come in at 11 a.m. and remain until midnight. They begin the day's preparation for around 2,500 and 3,000 meals for students, faculty, and others who are present in the campus cafeteria before the dinner hour.

"THE SECOND SHIFT will come in at 11 a.m. and remain until midnight. They begin the day's preparation for around 2,500 and 3,000 meals for students, faculty, and others who are present in the campus cafeteria before the dinner hour."

"There will be about 100 people who will be working various hours before the day is over in the preparation of the food. We have two groups," said Oglesby, director of food service for NBO.

"The most interesting part of this program is that the food service staff gets to take the meals to the students and return home for the weekend, while others work all day and almost all of the seven days of the week," Oglesby said.

"IN THE FIVE-DEAL plan," Oglesby relaxed, "the students take five meals a day, for five days, and the 20 meals they receive at the same time. The second group will be here for all of their meals, except on Sunday, when the cafeteria is closed.

When asked who plans the meals, Oglesby responded, "The students take five meals a day, for five days, and the 20 meals they receive at the same time. The second group will be here for all of their meals, except on Sunday, when the cafeteria is closed.

Revolver Shooting Class Breaks From Monotony

By Debbie Epley

A section of the criminal justice department at NBO offers a course in revolver shooting. The class, which meets six weeks, is mainly for criminal justice majors but a few people enrolled in the class to break from regular classes.

The class is established for four years as a regular class, the first year it was part of the criminal justice club. The equipment used in the class is a .357 magnum revolver, holsters, bullet, and ear protection. The equipment is provided by the Miami police department.

The revolver weighs 35 ounces empty and has a six-inch barrel. There are approximately 37 people enrolled in the class. The class is almost split in half as far as males to females, said Leon Manning instructor.

"There are a few more females," added Manning.

"Fire arm safety is a major aspect in the class," commented Manning.

"In the class, the students will know the proper way to pick up a weapon, and unload it safely, if they find one on the streets or in their house," Manning.

SEVERAL OF THE revolver shooting students go on to work in police business. Pam Bradley, one of Manning's students has won several police-type contests.

Remunerative Undertaking

Springtime is always full of surprises for us all, but Dryer, coordinator of the NBRO supply room, got a real shock when he discovered a colony of bees nesting in a tree on his property.

Dryer's property is located about eight miles east of Miami. Although Dryer discovered the bees about a year ago, this spring marked his first attempt to remove the bees from the tree, and release them in man-made hives.

"The tree is about six inches in diameter, and the honeycomb runs about eight feet," Dryer explained. "In a few days, we'll cut down the tree and place the bees in hives. I just bought five new ones."

"I haven't had any previous experience in raising bees," commented Dryer. "A friend of mine will be doing a lot of the actual relocating. Then we will take the honey and sell it."

"After I get the hang of it, I intend to expand. I'd like to have at least 40 hives before I'm finished," Dryer stated. "If I were to buy a queen bee for every hive, it would cost me about $2500, and double my profit."

One thing that Dryer freely admits to is being a little weary of the bees. "The two days that inspected about 30 of the hives, checking for queen bees, came out all right, but I only got a single new queen," said Dryer.

"I don't know if I will be that lucky. In any case, don't expect to be around when they cut down the tree. I'll see what everything works, and then I'll try my hand at it," concluded Dryer.
Gridders Develop Evident Ability

While dealing with a shortage of prospects in the defensive secondary, the Northeastern A&M football coaches have found themselves stretching the talents for the remainder of spring drills.

Six problems have been working out this spring, each showing promise, according to coaches Bob Maxwell and Bill Yocum.

"We'll have more players to work with when practice sessions begin late this afternoon," said Yocum.

H E A D I N G U P T H E L i s t of top prospects is Kelly Benefield, Bristow, 6'4, 180, a running back for the Bobcats. Benefield was a starter on the All-NBD team last season while enduring a 13-man lineup and pulling down two interceptions. He also had four blocked kicks.

ANOTHER SECONDARY HOPEFUL is Dean Morris, Tulsa Union, 5'-9, 190, also a returning starter.

"Dean is probably the hardest hitter on the team," said Maxwell.

"He's a good athlete and has the potential to be an All-American this fall," noted Maxwell.

"He has all the good features of a ready-made safety and has a good future ahead of him.

Last season Benefield recorded 23 unreturned tackles while receiving aid on 21 other tackles. He ranked third in the state with 101 tackles.

PHILIP GADDIS, Oklahoma City High, 6'-0, 195, a running back has been a player who has established himself as a sure-handed receiver. He is listed as 3rd or 4th offensive player of the year in high school while having received honourable mention on the All-State team.

"He played very little last season and we feel he could be very helpful on the safety needs," said Maxwell.

"We have a limited action last year. "Philip is lacking in size," continued Maxwell, "but we feel he can...

NORSE WIND
SENATE ELECTIONS SEEM WORTHLESS

Don't forget, student senate elections will be held Tuesday, if you could truly call it an election.

The most important, and the most desirable, quality of a proper election is freedom of choice. In a good election, the voter has the right to choose between two or more candidates. It's even better when there is a noticeable difference between the candidates. But even if the candidates have no differences in their stands—like the carbon-copy candidates in the last gubernatorial race, Ron Nigh and George Shors—there is still that important element of choice.

NEO voters will be blessed this student senate election with a wide choice of . . . one. It appears that up to last Tuesday, the deadline for filing for one of the five student senate offices, only one person filed for each office. As a result, those, who filed will be automatically elected, even if nobody votes.

Granted, there are very few people in the student senate that meet the qualifications for student senate president, if not just one person. According to the exacting senatorial constitution, the president must be a sophomore with at least 24 credit hours and a member in good standing of the student senate. There, obviously, are other qualification not mentioned. For the constitution, namely honesty, determination, maturity, and open-mindedness. Luckily, the next president, Claremore sophomore Dean Atchison, meets, and exceeds those qualifications.

None-the-less, an election with no choice of candidates is not a true election. The voters who will go to the "polls" Tuesday will have no real say as to whom shall be the next student senate president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, or senator-at-large. They will only be putting their stamps of approval on those candidates. Inevitably, for lack of anything better to do when they get to the polls, they will mark their ballots without going through much thought at all. Oh well, at least they will be voting.

As silly and a futile as this election may seem with its "wide variety of candidates", it is still an election, and still an important part of student senate/student body relations. Even in a one candidate election"like this one, the voter does have a choice, but as is- as to who will fill a certain position. A blatant "NO vote", or "non-vote" is an indication that the candidate in question is, in the voters opinion, not qualified to fill that position.

So, during the Tuesday elections, don't pass the student senate table in the student union without stopping to cast your vote (or "non-vote"). Like it or not, it is still an important election. Hopefully Atchison and next year's senate could arouse more interest in these elections from both prospective candidates and voters.

Q. In your classes, you stress the importance of writing. What exactly constitutes "good writing"?
A. What constitutes good writing depends on the occasion. Each occasion requires a different style of writing, formal, informal, familiar. Also involved is a choice of words, sentence structure, among other things. People should very their writing to meet the need, subject matter, and audience.

Q. How important is it to know how to write well?
A. It is exceedingly important to know how to write well for many reasons. One major reason is because virtually everyone will require written communication skills personally, socially or officially.

The requirements for effective writing are the same requirements for effective living. Let's just say effective living. These include the ability to think, to organize thoughts, and to express ourselves in a clear, logical manner.

Q. Aren't there any fields where written communication is not important?
A. Written communication is always important. Life is more and more tied to better opportunities which require written communication skills personally, socially or officially.

Q. Do you think the ability to effectively communicate on paper is lessened enough in today's educational system?
A. I do not know how to write well.

Q. Do you think the quality of writing in the Norse Wind is increased enough in recent years?
A. I am really don't know about other colleges. I get that other courses at NEO do require writing. We should stress writing more in ENGLISH classes. The instructors taught to require more written work, and essays. This not only gives the students a good practice, it motivates them to learn English.

Q. What do you think of the quality of writing in the Norse Wind?
A. I think the punctuality as to when it should and could be improved. The sentence structure is often too weak.

But, I'm proud of what they are doing in the Norse Wind. They're making it interesting to read.
